

Can you find the Lego figurines hidden in the CERN data centre?

A LEGO® figurine in the CERN data centre, as seen on Google Street View.

Hunting the Higgs is so last year. 2014 is all about finding Lego® figurines scattered around the CERN data centre! Find them using Google Street View (below) and you can win CERN-related prizes. For

Posted on JAN 22
2014 2:09PM

Share this story

Republish

Tags

CERN

competition

more details (including a map and some handy hints), visit the CERN Bulletin website, here.

View Larger Map

Navigate around the data center to find the figurines.

Join the conversation

Contribute

Do you have story ideas or something to contribute? Let us know!

OUR UNDERWRITERS

Thank to you our underwriters, who have supported us since the transition from International Science Grid This Week (iSGTW) into Science Node in 2015. We are incredibly grateful.

View all underwriters

CATEGORIES

Advanced computing
Research networks
Big data
Tech trends
Community building

CONTACT

Science Node

Email:

editors@sciencenode.org

Website:

sciencenode.org

Copyright © 2022 Science Node™ | Privacy Notice | Sitemap

Disclaimer: While Science Node™ does its best to provide complete and up-to-date information, it does not warrant that the information is error-free and disclaims all liability with respect to results from the use of the information.